League Cricket.

The match, Hongkong "B" versus Telegraphs, in the above League was played

Mr Oliver had made 60 not out.

the Hongkong Cricket Club's lawn tennis tournament resulted as follows:—

beat W. King and W. H. Purcell (owns 5/6) 6/4, 6/3; Lieut. Anderson

Professional Pairs.—Third round: Capt.
Murray and Lieut. Thompson beat R. E. H.
Oliver and W. E. Warburton 6/1, 6/2.

On Monday H. Hancock will meet C. A.
Carr at 5 p.m. in the third round of the singles handicap, while at 4.30 Capt.
Beasley and A. Humphreys will face one another to decide who shall appear in the semi-final of the championship singles.

THE VARIETY "SOCCER" MATCH.

The thirty-sixth inter-Varsity "soccer"
match finished up with a draw of 1 goal
each, at Queen's Club, on Feb. 20th., which was just about what it should have been.

Playing against the sun, but with the wind, Oxford scored in the first five minutes, Sayer putting in a shot that Pinkham had no earthly hope of stopping.
Much of the credit of the goal belonged to Rayson, who made a smart run and centre.
Squire equalised ten minutes later, after Appleton had saved a hot shot from Bache.

After that, however, the game tailed off.
Oxford, on the whole, had the best of the first half, and Cambridge of the second.
The game was tremendously fast, if not bewilderingly clever, on one side being in possession one minute and attacking strongly the next. Both goal-keepers were extremely fine, and one aim of Appleton's
in the second half—a runner in the left-hand corner—was up to any international form.

Two forwards on both sides just missed
the proper finish in front of goal, and missed opportunities by continually shooting wide too high. W. B. Harris was the best and fastest forward on the field. Although the forwards of both sides were disappointed for either side might so easily have won. Mr W. G. Edwards, who was playing for Oxford, is a brother of Mr G.
H. Edwards of Hongkong. The teams were:—

Oxford: J. A. Appleton, F. N. Tuff,
R. L. Huddell, A. C. L. Clarke (Captain), W. G. Edwards, J. G. Binkerteth, K. Rayson, A. Berry, H. J. C. Peare,
G. E. Blyth and R. A. Mayles.
Cambridge: G. P. Pugh, V. G. Theobald, B. Brindley, F. H. Hooper,
D. J. W. Lewis, A. T. Harman, V. Edwards, R. C. Brainer, H. G. Bache, C. E.
Barnes, and W. B. Harris.

Speaker, Chamber, in a public speech,
said that the match was one of the greatest of the kind.

HONGKONG, SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1909.

UNIVERSITY SCHEMES FOR CHINA.

HONGKONG, in view of its own University proposals, is naturally interested in the University scheme which Lord WILLIAM GARDNER has brought out with him to China. From an interesting article which appears in the North China Daily News we gather for the first time some general idea of the broad outlines of Lord WILLIAM's proposal, and incidentally learn that the scheme is of a tentative nature; that as the result of inquiries in loco it may be modified, or even completely altered; and that if sufficient support is not forthcoming it may be dropped altogether. Keen as its English supporters may be they have no wish to foist upon China an educational centre that will not be welcomed, or which may not be suited to local conditions. The gentlemen and scholars who put the idea in train have been working for the past ten months as a Joint Committee of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. This body consists of Tutors and Lecturers assisted by Sir ELMER SAROW, the Rev. Lord WILLIAM GARDNER and the Rev. J. H. RYAN. They have evidently made a thorough investigation of China's educational needs, consulting among others Bishops SCOTT, ROOS, CARRERS, GRAVES, PRICE and COFFEY; Drs. J. C. GIBSON, LIVINGSTON HARR, COCHRAN, H. HODGKIN, and HARMAN P. BEACH; the Rev. ARNOLD FORSTER, Sir ROBERT HART, and Mr. J. R. MORR.

China's awakening to Western ideas, says Lord WILLIAM GARDNER, drew attention to two important features of the present situation: the immense and growing demand for advanced University education; and the fact that in Japanese and Chinese Universities, so-called, Western education has a strongly materialistic bias which tends to sweep away old religious beliefs, and with them all old sanctions of morality, without replacing them by any other code of ethics. In the University of Tokyo there are some 7,000 Chinese students, and "Western" schools and universities, the efficiency of which leaves much to be desired, are being founded all over China. China's ruling class being an aristocracy of education not of birth, the future of the nation depends upon the University as an educational centre.

The Committee, however, arrived at the conclusion that China's greatest need at the present day is a really efficient University, which would set a high standard of educational efficiency and moral tone, and at the same time might be regarded as a model for native Universities. It is suggested that this University should be organized upon similar lines to Oxford and Cambridge, and should consist of a central body of professors and a number of colleges and hostels each supported by missionary bodies of various denominations in which the students would be under some kind of moral discipline. In these hostels or colleges, religious instruction on the lines approved of by the society or denomination that supported them, would be given. It is hoped that by this means many of the existing Christian colleges might be federated into the central University. It is suggested that the professors and teachers of the University should not be required to subscribe to any definite formulae of Christian belief; on the other hand they will be required to be men of strong Christian principles, and in keen sympathy with missionary ideals. This is necessary to overcome the instinctive antipathy of race and for the establishment and maintenance of that intimate personal contact between teacher and student outside the classroom which is so vital to the success of the present scheme. Into details of salaries and quarters it is unnecessary to go at any length; it need only be said that it is proposed that the Professors, who will be appointed by a special Nominating Board, shall be provided with quarters, and paid salaries ranging from £250 to £400 per annum. At the outset the staff would consist of European or American Professors, but later some of the Professors would be Chinese—Christians and men of known ability.

The subjects taught from the outset would include Natural Science, Engineering, Political Philosophy and Economy, International Law, Modern History, Mathematics, and Moral Philosophy—the teaching of which through knowledge of Confucian literature would be essential. Non-Christian students would be admitted to the University lectures on an equal footing with Christians. The site of the University and the relations between it and existing colleges are matters on which the Committee hesitates to express an opinion until Lord WILLIAM GARDNER's return from China. As the first necessity of a University on the lines proposed is an efficient and qualified staff, the first practical step suggested is the raising of a fund to send out six or eight, or if possible, ten men of the requisite ability and energy to work in connexion with some of the large and more efficient existing Missionary Colleges for a period of three years, in order to acquire a knowledge of the language. At the end of three years these ten men, with the addition of two or three more, and under the leadership of a senior man of longer experience of the country, with the co-operation of staffs of existing colleges would form the teaching staff of the University. It is anticipated that £10,000 would give the University a fair start in the way of buildings and plant, and allowing for unforeseen expenses, it has been estimated that the original capital outlay on the University need not exceed £250,000, while an annual income or endowment of £50,000 would probably suffice when once the University has started. General expenses would be covered by students' fees and the University, once founded, would be largely self-governing within the limits of a carefully drawn Constitution and Trust Deeds.

Such are the broad outlines of the scheme. Lord WILLIAM's university is to be essentially a Christian institution, so far as we can gather, would be located in Northern China for the place visited by him have been Hankow, Tientsin, Peking, Tientsin and Shanghai and his further plans, however, are not yet decided. The Committee, however, arrived at the conclusion that China's greatest need at the present day is a really efficient University, which would set a high standard of educational efficiency and moral tone, and at the same time might be regarded as a model for native Universities. Into details of salaries and quarters it is unnecessary to go at any length; it need only be said that it is proposed that the Professors, who will be appointed by a special Nominating Board, shall be provided with quarters, and paid salaries ranging from £250 to £400 per annum. At the outset the staff would consist of European or American Professors, but later some of the Professors would be Chinese—Christians and men of known ability.

The subjects taught from the outset would include Natural Science, Engineering, Political Philosophy and Economy, International Law, Modern History, Mathematics, and Moral Philosophy—the teaching of which through knowledge of Confucian literature would be essential. Non-Christian students would be admitted to the University lectures on an equal footing with Christians. The site of the University and the relations between it and existing colleges are matters on which the Committee hesitates to express an opinion until Lord WILLIAM GARDNER's return from China. As the first necessity of a University on the lines proposed is an efficient and qualified staff, the first practical step suggested is the raising of a fund to send out six or eight, or if possible, ten men of the requisite ability and energy to work in connexion with some of the large and more efficient existing Missionary Colleges for a period of three years, in order to acquire a knowledge of the language. At the end of three years these ten men, with the addition of two or three more, and under the leadership of a senior man of longer experience of the country, with the co-operation of staffs of existing colleges would form the teaching staff of the University. It is anticipated that £10,000 would give the University a fair start in the way of buildings and plant, and allowing for unforeseen expenses, it has been estimated that the original capital outlay on the University need not exceed £250,000, while an annual income or endowment of £50,000 would probably suffice when once the University has started. General expenses would be covered by students' fees and the University, once founded, would be largely self-governing within the limits of a carefully drawn Constitution and Trust Deeds.

Such are the broad outlines of the scheme. Lord WILLIAM's university is to be essentially a Christian institution, so far as we can gather, would be located in Northern China for the place visited by him have been Hankow, Tientsin, Peking, Tientsin and Shanghai and his further plans, however, are not yet decided. The Committee, however, arrived at the conclusion that China's greatest need at the present day is a really efficient University, which would set a high standard of educational efficiency and moral tone, and at the same time might be regarded as a model for native Universities. It is suggested that this University should be organized upon similar lines to Oxford and Cambridge, and should consist of a central body of professors and a number of colleges and hostels each supported by missionary bodies of various denominations in which the students would be under some kind of moral discipline. In these hostels or colleges, religious instruction on the lines approved of by the society or denomination that supported them, would be given. It is hoped that by this means many of the existing Christian colleges might be federated into the central University. It is suggested that the professors and teachers of the University should not be required to subscribe to any definite formulae of Christian belief; on the other hand they will be required to be men of strong Christian principles, and in keen sympathy with missionary ideals. This is necessary to overcome the instinctive antipathy of race and for the establishment and maintenance of that intimate personal contact between teacher and student outside the classroom which is so vital to the success of the present scheme. Into details of salaries and quarters it is unnecessary to go at any length; it need only be said that it is proposed that the Professors, who will be appointed by a special Nominating Board, shall be provided with quarters, and paid salaries ranging from £250 to £400 per annum.
